

Patrick Brzeski

Originally from the American Midwest, Patrick Brzeski has been based in the Asia-Pacific region as a business and culture reporter since 2007. After a period of freelancing for the Wall Street Journal, South China Morning Post, Guardian, Time and others, he joined The Hollywood Reporter as an Asia-based correspondent and online editor in 2012. In 2015, Patrick was named THR's Asia bureau chief, tasked with managing the magazine's coverage of the boom in cross-border investment between China and Hollywood. In 2017, he won the Southern California Journalism Award for best personality profile for a cover feature on China's then-richest man, Wang Jianlin, chairman of Dalian Wanda Group, which was attempting to buy up large swaths of Hollywood. Current areas of reporting include South Korea's high-flying film and TV industry, Japan's resurgent anime business and the increasing importance of Asia to the growth prospects of global streaming platforms. Patrick is currently based in Tokyo.
